

CHECK PLEASE

Earlier this week, I met a friend for breakfast. He’s a member of another church here in town. We get breakfast about once a month to catch up, talk about ministry, and share the recent happenings in each other’s lives. He’s a good man and a good friend. We were long overdue for a meet up, so we had a particularly long breakfast this week.

As happens to us pretty regularly, a couple came in that he knew, and they stopped and said hello. Then a couple came in that I knew, and we stopped and said hello. Then another individual came in that I knew from here at Jenks. We were done eating, just enjoying each other’s company and talking, when the waitress came over and picked up the bill. She slipped away, and then our brother, from here at Jenks, gave me a wave and told me he loved me, wished us a good day, and left.

My friend started looking around and putting the pieces together. He said “Did that man just pay our bill?” I said, “Yeah, he did.” He said, “You go to church with him?” I said, “Yeah, I do.” For the next few minutes, we talked about what a generous and powerful example that was. It made a real impression on him. It made my day.

In 1 Timothy 4:12, Paul tells his protégé, “Let no one despise you for your youth,” then it says, “but set the believers an example in speech, in conduct, in love, in faith, in purity.”

Brother, I hope you’re reading today’s bulletin article. Thank you for breakfast. Thank you for setting a good example. Thank you for making a good impression on my friend. Thank you for representing our family well. And, I love you.

Nick
