

THINGS DADS MUST STOP SAYING IN MARRIAGE

Dan Orlovsky, a former NFL quarterback and current ESPN analyst, may be best known for a prayer he prayed on-air after Buffalo Bills safety Damar Hamlin suffered a cardiac arrest on the field. Recently, Orlovsky wrote an article for All Pro Dad about 5 Things Dads Must Stop Saying in Marriage. I have paraphrased his article below.

1. "Whatever you want, it doesn't matter to me."

This is a way of disengaging. It says to our wives and kids, "What matters to you isn't important to me." It communicates that responsibilities don't need to be shared.

Instead, say: "I trust your judgment." If she specifically asks for your opinion, add, "Let's look at the options together."

2. "Why are you getting so upset?"

Tone matters here. If you're caring, this will land better. This communicates that the way she feels is not legitimate or valid. It hints that you think some emotions are acceptable while others should be stuffed down or ignored.

Instead, say: "I can see you're upset. Help me understand what I'm missing."

3. "I'll do it later."

You're in the middle of watching a game and she asks you to help. "I'll do it later," communicates your interests trump hers.

Instead, say: "I will get to this as soon as I can," or "Please remind me in five minutes."

4. "I'm just joking—relax."

This crosses over from kidding to crushing. It wounds. If your wife isn't laughing, it wasn't a joke.

Instead, say: "I'm sorry. That was intended to be funny, but I can see it hurt you."

5. "Must be nice."

When your wife gets a break, goes out with friends, or buys something for herself, you've hinted it's undeserved, that she's unworthy.

Instead, say: "You really deserve this break."
